SECTION A (READING - 20 MARKS)

Q1. Read the following passage and answer the questions that follow.

- (1) It is ten o' clock of summer's night. As the captain of my sail boat, I stand at the helm and look for the Pole Star. It is comforting to see it up in the sky. I often think of other sailors, on other seas, steering by the Pole Star. Humans have always tried to conquer the sea and the Pole Star has always been a great help.
- (2) Man's early efforts to conquer the seas were humble. But to him, with his primitive equipment and knowledge, they must have appeared as great achievements. It must have been a great adventure for early man to reach a nearby island on a piece of log, in search of fruit and nuts. It must have been a greater adventure when he could settle down on the island in the permanent shelter. The invention of things like traps, hooks, lines and nets for catching fish were great steps forward and much more paying than hunting animals in wild forests. Living also was presenter and safer near the seashore than deep in the woodlands where dangerous animals roamed.
- (3) Man soon learned to occupy himself, day after day, in fishing and other occupations connected with the sea. More importantly he learned to sail across the sea in search of food and fortune. Timber and Bamboo were widely used by early man for his travels on the sea. Two or more logs could be tied together with ropes and then bamboo poles set up above them vertically, to carry pieces of cloth or palm leaves as sails. This arrangement was good for making use of wind power and thus came into being the sailboat. It was the first power-driven vehicle ever used by man. Sailboats carried early man to distant lands with the help of sea breezes.
